Studies have shown a link between financial instability and mental health problems such as anxiety and depression. (National Library of Medicine)

Eight in ten American teenagers don’t maintain a savings account. Eighty-seven percent say they don’t understand their personal finances. (Forbes)

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) found that 53% of individuals with a higher financial literacy spent less than their income, and 65% had set aside a three-month emergency fund. (Forbes)

Meta-analysis of financial literacy courses in developed and developing countries shows a significant impact on financial impacts and other measures such as self-control. (Idea Labs)

Eight in ten American teenagers don’t maintain a savings account. Eighty-seven percent say they don’t understand their personal finances. (Forbes)

The FINRA Foundation found that students with higher financial literacy were less likely to have late fees, make only minimum payments on their credit cards and take out payday loans. (Forbes)

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) found that 53% of individuals with a higher financial literacy spent less than their income, and 65% had set aside a three-month emergency fund. (Forbes)

Meta-analysis of financial literacy courses in developed and developing countries shows a significant impact on financial impacts and other measures such as self-control. (Idea Labs)

Eight in ten American teenagers don’t maintain a savings account. Eighty-seven percent say they don’t understand their personal finances. (Forbes)

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) found that 53% of individuals with a higher financial literacy spent less than their income, and 65% had set aside a three-month emergency fund. (Forbes)

Meta-analysis of financial literacy courses in developed and developing countries shows a significant impact on financial impacts and other measures such as self-control. (Idea Labs)

Eight in ten American teenagers don’t maintain a savings account. Eighty-seven percent say they don’t understand their personal finances. (Forbes)

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) found that 53% of individuals with a higher financial literacy spent less than their income, and 65% had set aside a three-month emergency fund. (Forbes)

Meta-analysis of financial literacy courses in developed and developing countries shows a significant impact on financial impacts and other measures such as self-control. (Idea Labs)

Eight in ten American teenagers don’t maintain a savings account. Eighty-seven percent say they don’t understand their personal finances. (Forbes)

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) found that 53% of individuals with a higher financial literacy spent less than their income, and 65% had set aside a three-month emergency fund. (Forbes)

Meta-analysis of financial literacy courses in developed and developing countries shows a significant impact on financial impacts and other measures such as self-control. (Idea Labs)

Eight in ten American teenagers don’t maintain a savings account. Eighty-seven percent say they don’t understand their personal finances. (Forbes)

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) found that 53% of individuals with a higher financial literacy spent less than their income, and 65% had set aside a three-month emergency fund. (Forbes)

Meta-analysis of financial literacy courses in developed and developing countries shows a significant impact on financial impacts and other measures such as self-control. (Idea Labs)

Eight in ten American teenagers don’t maintain a savings account. Eighty-seven percent say they don’t understand their personal finances. (Forbes)

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) found that 53% of individuals with a higher financial literacy spent less than their income, and 65% had set aside a three-month emergency fund. (Forbes)

Meta-analysis of financial literacy courses in developed and developing countries shows a significant impact on financial impacts and other measures such as self-control. (Idea Labs)

Eight in ten American teenagers don’t maintain a savings account. Eighty-seven percent say they don’t understand their personal finances. (Forbes)

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) found that 53% of individuals with a higher financial literacy spent less than their income, and 65% had set aside a three-month emergency fund. (Forbes)

Meta-analysis of financial literacy courses in developed and developing countries shows a significant impact on financial impacts and other measures such as self-control. (Idea Labs)

Eight in ten American teenagers don’t maintain a savings account. Eighty-seven percent say they don’t understand their personal finances. (Forbes)

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) found that 53% of individuals with a higher financial literacy spent less than their income, and 65% had set aside a three-month emergency fund. (Forbes)

Meta-analysis of financial literacy courses in developed and developing countries shows a significant impact on financial impacts and other measures such as self-control. (Idea Labs)

Eight in ten American teenagers don’t maintain a savings account. Eighty-seven percent say they don’t understand their personal finances. (Forbes)

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) found that 53% of individuals with a higher financial literacy spent less than their income, and 65% had set aside a three-month emergency fund. (Forbes)

Meta-analysis of financial literacy courses in developed and developing countries shows a significant impact on financial impacts and other measures such as self-control. (Idea Labs)

Eight in ten American teenagers don’t maintain a savings account. Eighty-seven percent say they don’t understand their personal finances. (Forbes)

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) found that 53% of individuals with a higher financial literacy spent less than their income, and 65% had set aside a three-month emergency fund. (Forbes)

Meta-analysis of financial literacy courses in developed and developing countries shows a significant impact on financial impacts and other measures such as self-control. (Idea Labs)

Eight in ten American teenagers don’t maintain a savings account. Eighty-seven percent say they don’t understand their personal finances. (Forbes)

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) found that 53% of individuals with a higher financial literacy spent less than their income, and 65% had set aside a three-month emergency fund. (Forbes)

Meta-analysis of financial literacy courses in developed and developing countries shows a significant impact on financial impacts and other measures such as self-control. (Idea Labs)

Eight in ten American teenagers don’t maintain a savings account. Eighty-seven percent say they don’t understand their personal finances. (Forbes)

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) found that 53% of individuals with a higher financial literacy spent less than their income, and 65% had set aside a three-month emergency fund. (Forbes)

Meta-analysis of financial literacy courses in developed and developing countries shows a significant impact on financial impacts and other measures such as self-control. (Idea Labs)

Eight in ten American teenagers don’t maintain a savings account. Eighty-seven percent say they don’t understand their personal finances. (Forbes)

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) found that 53% of individuals with a higher financial literacy spent less than their income, and 65% had set aside a three-month emergency fund. (Forbes)

Meta-analysis of financial literacy courses in developed and developing countries shows a significant impact on financial impacts and other measures such as self-control. (Idea Labs)

Eight in ten American teenagers don’t maintain a savings account. Eighty-seven percent say they don’t understand their personal finances. (Forbes)

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) found that 53% of individuals with a higher financial literacy spent less than their income, and 65% had set aside a three-month emergency fund. (Forbes)

Meta-analysis of financial literacy courses in developed and developing countries shows a significant impact on financial impacts and other measures such as self-control. (Idea Labs)

Eight in ten American teenagers don’t maintain a savings account. Eighty-seven percent say they don’t understand their personal finances. (Forbes)

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) found that 53% of individuals with a higher financial literacy spent less than their income, and 65% had set aside a three-month emergency fund. (Forbes)

Meta-analysis of financial literacy courses in developed and developing countries shows a significant impact on financial impacts and other measures such as self-control. (Idea Labs)

Eight in ten American teenagers don’t maintain a savings account. Eighty-seven percent say they don’t understand their personal finances. (Forbes)

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) found that 53% of individuals with a higher financial literacy spent less than their income, and 65% had set aside a three-month emergency fund. (Forbes)

Meta-analysis of financial literacy courses in developed and developing countries shows a significant impact on financial impacts and other measures such as self-control. (Idea Labs)

Eight in ten American teenagers don’t maintain a savings account. Eighty-seven percent say they don’t understand their personal finances. (Forbes)

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) found that 53% of individuals with a higher financial literacy spent less than their income, and 65% had set aside a three-month emergency fund. (Forbes)

Meta-analysis of financial literacy courses in developed and developing countries shows a significant impact on financial impacts and other measures such as self-control. (Idea Labs)

Eight in ten American teenagers don’t maintain a savings account. Eighty-seven percent say they don’t understand their personal finances. (Forbes)

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) found that 53% of individuals with a higher financial literacy spent less than their income, and 65% had set aside a three-month emergency fund. (Forbes)

Meta-analysis of financial literacy courses in developed and developing countries shows a significant impact on financial impacts and other measures such as self-control. (Idea Labs)

Eight in ten American teenagers don’t maintain a savings account. Eighty-seven percent say they don’t understand their personal finances. (Forbes)

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) found that 53% of individuals with a higher financial literacy spent less than their income, and 65% had set aside a three-month emergency fund. (Forbes)

Meta-analysis of financial literacy courses in developed and developing countries shows a significant impact on financial impacts and other measures such as self-control. (Idea Labs)

Eight in ten American teenagers don’t maintain a savings account. Eighty-seven percent say they don’t understand their personal finances. (Forbes)

The Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) found that 53% of individuals with a higher financial literacy spent less than their income, and 65% had set aside a three-month emergency fund. (Forbes)

Meta-analysis of financial literacy courses in developed and developing countries shows a significant impact on financial impacts and other measures such as self-control. (Idea Labs)